

The currencies of the Islamic world

During century VII, when in western Europe they dominated the Barbarians, a town of Semitic origin was acquiring a personality each defined time more: the Arabs. They came from the region between the Red Sea, the Persian gulf and the Indian Ocean, they were divided in tribes, the majority nomadic and dedicated to the pasturing, a little profitable activity in the desert and inhospitable inner regions of territory. Often in war among them, the Arab tribes also lived on incursions and sackings. Its primitive social organization not allowed a market system, and some did not anticipate political unit. In this climate of anarchy and misery, he appeared a personage of great intelligence that, with its ideas and their charisma, was going to become one of the protagonists of history, as much of happened like of our days: Mahoma.

Mahoma and the unit of the Arab world

Mahoma was born between years 570-580, in an aristocratic family, in Mecca, city santa for the Arabs, then pagans and politeístas. It exerted many offices, and during its life errabundo, typical of the local reality of that time, had occasion to know about not only to the Bedouins and his afflicted existence, but also the religions of Jews and Christians, of whom it included/understood the value of its monotheism. After its wedding with a well-off widow called Jad-i to, Mahoma initiated a period of meditation, after which it undertook his preaching: the true and only God of the Arab was Wing (that means @
